Market Review

International equities continuous their positive trend since May, delivering a 1.8% gain in June. The Information Technology sector led the way with an 8% increase, buoyed by gains in US tech giants such as Nvidia (12.6%) and Apple (9.6%). Apple's announcement of several AI integrations, including a partnership with OpenAI, was well-received by the market. Taiwan was the best-performing region in June, thanks to the strong performance of TSMC (18%) and Hon Hai Precision (24%). On the detractor side, Nike experienced a significant decline, dropping over 20% in a single month due to heightened competition and weaker-than-expected US consumer spending.

Despite the Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) leaving the cash rate unchanged in their June meeting, the possibility of another rate hike remains. The futures market is currently pricing a 50% chance of a rate increase by the end of the year. The RBA's hawkish tone contributed to the Australian Dollar (AUD) strengthening against a basket of currencies, including the US Dollar (USD), resulting in a better performance for international equities on a hedged basis (2.5%). The front end of the Australian yield curve shifted higher, flattening due to the RBA's response and a hotter-than-expected monthly CPI indicator. The spread between 10- and 2-year yields compressed by 13 basis points (bps) during the month, contributing to the positive return of Australian Fixed Interest (0.8%). The long end of semi-government bonds was a major contributor, gaining 2% in June.

Despite a flattening yield curve, which typically indicates a higher risk of recession, Australian equities remained positive, rising 0.9% in June. Large-cap stocks continued to be favoured by investors, while small-cap stocks faced additional pressure from tax-loss selling. The Financials sector gained 5%, with three of the four major banks, plus Macquarie, ending the month in positive territory. However, the Materials sector was a significant drag on the index, declining by 6.5% due to falling commodity prices impacting iron ore and lithium miners.

International fixed interest gained 0.6%, marking the second positive month of the quarter. Treasuries led the gains with a 0.8% increase, benefiting from a lower US yield curve, as the US 10-year yield fell by approximately 10 bps amid slowing US inflation. Japan, the second-largest constituent of the index, also contributed to the gain as the Japanese 10-year yield eased slightly. In Europe, French government bonds were sold off amid heightened political risk, causing the spread between German and French bonds to widen by over 33 bps.

Global property had a solid month, rising 1.4% in June, fuelled by continued hopes of a US rate cut later this year, provided the disinflation trend continues. Conversely, global infrastructure had a disappointing June, falling 2.5%, dragged down by US utilities. Investors grew wary of the increased cost of capital, which may impact the ability to maintain current dividend levels, leading to a decline in stock prices.
