Market Review

In February 2025, global equity and bond markets faced mixed performance amid economic uncertainties and policy developments, with notable impacts on both asset classes. US equities showed weakness, with a 0.7% total return loss for developed market equities, largely driven by growing concerns over the US administration's policy agenda. Corporate and consumer sentiment weakened, and inflation concerns resurfaced, particularly with the potential for tariffs that could exacerbate inflation. US equity sectors that struggled included communication services and consumer discretionary, while sectors like consumer staples, energy, and real estate showed some strength. The decline in the US market weighed on developed markets, especially Japan.

Conversely, global bond markets demonstrated resilience, serving as a diversifier against equity losses. Despite concerns over inflation due to tariffs and firmer-than-expected inflation data, bonds outperformed, with the Bloomberg Global Aggregate Index returning 1.4% for the month. A key factor behind this bond market strength was the declining sentiment in the US economy, with weaker consumer confidence and reduced business activity. US Treasury yields fell, with the 10-year yield dipping to 4.2%. The bond market's positive returns were not confined to government bonds alone, as emerging market debt also benefited, posting a 1.6% return.

While US equities struggled, emerging markets, particularly in Asia, showed stronger performance, largely driven by positive momentum in Chinese tech stocks. China's stock market surged by 11.7% in dollar terms due to optimism surrounding its technology sector, particularly AI advancements, like DeepSeek's open-source AI model. Real estate also performed well, with global benchmarks up by 2.6%, as falling bond yields supported this asset class.

In Europe, the MSCI Europe ex-UK Index rose by 3.4%, with European financials and defence stocks among the top-performing sectors. This outperformance came as investors anticipated a potential ceasefire in Ukraine and Europe's growing defence spending. The Eurozone's economy showed marginal expansion, but inflationary pressures continued, impacting the European Central Bank's policy decisions. The bond market in Europe saw modest returns, with German Bunds yielding 2.39%, while European corporate bonds also had a favourable performance.

In Japan, equity performance was more subdued, with the TOPIX index falling 3.8%. The market was affected by rising concerns about US trade policies and tariffs, especially given Japan's significant exposure to the US economy. However, Japan's government bond yields rose in response to stronger-than-expected economic data, contributing to a narrowing of the interest rate gap between Japan and the US. This development, coupled with the yen's appreciation, led to a decline in Japanese exporter stocks.

Overall, the bond market remained strong in February, largely driven by a flight to safer assets amid growth concerns and economic uncertainty. Fixed income sectors performed well, with US Treasuries leading the pack. In contrast, equity markets faced challenges, particularly in the US, where growth concerns and trade policy uncertainties weighed on investor sentiment.

The Morningstar Historical Corporate Sustainability Score is a weighted average of the trailing 12 months of Morningstar Portfolio Corporate Sustainability Scores. Historical portfolio scores are not equal-weighted; rather, more-recent portfolios are weighted more heavily than older portfolios. Combining the trailing 12 months of portfolio scores adds consistency while still reflecting portfolio managers' current decisions by weighting the most recent portfolio scores more heavily.

ESG pillar scores are displayed as a number between 0 and 100 with most scores range between 0 and 25. It is the asset-weighted average of the company environmental, social, governance risk scores for the covered corporate holdings in a portfolio. The scores measure the degree to which a company's economic value may be at risk driven by environmental, social, and governance factors. The risk represents the unmanaged risk exposure after taking into account a company's management of such risks.
